

There is no branch that is more powerful than the other due to the system of checks and balances. The president is able to veto the bills, but the legislative branch can overrule the president's veto and the judicial branch has the power to declare any laws or acts unconstitutional. However, the legislative branch can propose amendments which are able to overrule the judicial branch. The whole system really just goes in one big circle.

But if I were to choose, it would be the legislative branch.

1. Overrules president's vetoes
2. Overrules judicial decisions
3. can impeach/remove presidents/judges
